Hazar, February 1.

THE Ministers of the Czar of Muscovy and of the King of Denmark are not a little alarmed here at the News they have received from Copenhagen, of the Notification which the Envoy of Poland at that Court has made to his Danish Majesty, of an Alliance which the King his Master has concluded with France; and though he declared at the same time, that the said Alliance tended only to the re-establishing of a good Friendship and Intelligence between the two Crowns, and that far from being prejudicial to the Alliance of the Northern Powers, it will be a great Advantage to it, because the most Christian King has thereby engaged himself to abandon the Interests of the King of Sweden at the Court of the Grand Signior, not to intermeddle at all in the Affairs of Poland, and consequently not to assist Stanislaus any more directly or indirectly; yet 'tis apprehended that these Engagements on the Part of France have drawn from the King of Poland reciprocal Obligations; it being well known that France is not accustomed to do the Business of any Prince, without doing its own at the same time: 'Tis therefore the Opinion of the most discerning, that France considering the low Condition of the Affairs of Sweden, has abandoned its Design of reinstating Stanislaus on the Throne of Poland; but they can hardly believe 'tis in any other View than to draw off the King of Poland from the Northern Allies, and from the Interests of the Emperour and Empire against France. This will very probably forward the Treaty of Alliance which the last Letters from Vienna tell us is in Negotiation between the Emperour and the Czar; to which those Letters tell us the Emperour is the more disposed, not only on Account of the present Situation of Affairs in the Empire, but principally in Consideration of the exemplary Fidelity and unalterable Firmness with which the Czar adheres to his Allies as well in Adversity as in Prosperity.

The last Letters from Rastad are of the 26th past, and leave us in some Uncertainty still as to the Success of the Preliminaries which the two Generals are about adjusting there: In the mean while, the Letters from France continue to damp our Hopes of that Success; and it appears by the Orders which we learn that Court have given for immediately fortifying the 10 Towns in Alsace, and for other Preparations of War, that they reckon upon a sudden Rupture of those Conferences, rather than an Accommodation this Winter. 'Tis remarkable that in the Course of the Conferences at Rastad, till within a few Posts of late, the Letters from France have spoken of the Peace as infallible, and those from Germany have spoken of it very doubtfully; whereas now, those from France insinuate there will be a Rupture, and those from the Frontier Towns of Germany entertain us with the Probability of Peace. In the mean time 'tis certain the Emperour does not cease to exhort the Diet and the four associated Circles to prepare early, by his Example, for a vigorous continuance of the War, that they may not be surpris'd by an Enemy so vigilant and powerful as is France.

We cannot sufficiently admire, that while the Writers of the Letters from the Office at Paris might content themselves with telling us in general that the Conferences at Rastad are like to come to nothing, they should chuse to inform us of one Particular so honourable to the Emperour, as is that of his insisting on the King of France's being a Guarantee of the ancient Privileges proposed to be confirmed to the Catalonians: There was a time when his most Christian Majesty thought those Privileges reasonable to be secured; witness the 53th Article of the Pyrenean Treaty, viz.

LV. By virtue of the present Treaty, all the Catalonians and other Inhabitants of the said Province, as well Prelates, Ecclesiastical Persons, religious Persons, Lords, Gentlemen and Burgesses, as other Inhabitants, both of the Towns and of the Country, none excepted, shall have power to re-enter, and shall effectually re-enter, and be left and establish'd in the possession and peaceable enjoyment of all their Goods, Honours, Dignities, Privileges, Franchises, Rights, Immunities, Constitutions, and Liberties; and shall never be prosecuted, troubled, or molested, either in general, or in particular, upon any cause or pretence whatsoever, for any thing done since the beginning of the present War. And for that end his Catholick Majesty shall grant and cause to be publish'd, in good form, his Declarations of Amnesty and Pardon, in the behalf of the said Catalonians; which publication shall be made upon the same Day as the publication of the Peace: In consequence of which Declarations, it shall be permitted to all and any of them in particular, either personally to return to their Houses, and to the enjoyment of their Goods; or in case they be willing to settle their Habitation any where else out of Catalonia, they shall have liberty to do it, and to send into the said Country of Catalonia their Agents and Attorneys, to take, in their Names and for them, the possession of the said Goods, to improve and administer the same, receive the Fruits and Revenues, and transport the same whither they shall please; so that they shall not be oblig'd personally to go and do homage for the Lands and Mannors, whereunto their Attorneys shall have power to satisfy in their Name: And their Absence shall not hinder their free possession and enjoyment of the said Goods; which they shall have also liberty and full power to exchange or alienate by Sale, Gift, or otherwise: Yet upon that condition, that those they shall so commit for the management and improvement of their said Estates, be not suspected to the Governors or Magistrates of the Places where such Estates are situated; in which Case, the Owners shall appoint other Persons, that be acceptable and no way suspected. Yet it remaining at the will and power of his Catholick Majesty to prescribe the Place of the Abode to such of the said Catalonians, whose return into the Country shall not be acceptable to his Majesty; so that the other Liberties and Privileges granted unto them, and which they enjoy'd, shall not be repeal'd nor alter'd.

DUBLIN.

The Examination of Henry Murphy, taken before Alderman Quin of the City of Dublin, the 15th of January 1713.

THE Examinant being duly Sworn, saith, that he this Examinant on or about the 19th of December last past was enlisted by one James Roch, Merchant of this City, to serve the French King, (as he pretended) in the Regiment of Foot commanded by Sir Andrew Lee, and that this Examinant was to land at Havre-de-grace, and assured by the said Roch, that he this Examinant should march from thence to Lorraine, where he should see the young King; that one Mrs. Catherine Lucas, who for several Years past dwelt in France, and lately came into this Kingdom, is assistant to the said Roch in listing Persons to serve under the said Sir Andrew Lee, and promises them that they shall have four shillings six pence per Week for Subsistence, and a Route when they land in France; that the said Mrs. Lucas to encourage courage this Examinant and the other inlisted Persons, assured them that they should immediately march to Lorrain and see the young King; and if they behaved themselves well, should soon return with Preferment; that there are now two Ships in the Harbour ready to sail with the first fair Wind, with several of the said inlisted Persons, which are called the John and Mary, and the John; and that this Examinant was on board the John and Mary five Days; and that this Examinant was Yesterday informed by a Person inlisted, that they believed they had got about fifty Persons inlisted.
